VALUE

Resale advice from the experts:

According to Kelly Blue Book, the country's leading source of used car values, "A top factor in determining a vehicle's worth is the interior and exterior condition." Kelley Blue Book's Executive Editor, Charlie Vogelheim, recommends simple ways to retain and maintain your vehicle's value. "If a consumer puts a little time and care into their vehicle, depending on the make and model, there could be up to a $1,000 difference in the car's value down the road."

According to the NADA Guide book on auto values, "Two different vehicles of the same model may have drastically varying prices depending on options, mileage, and overall condition. To maximize resale value, make sure the exterior, interior, and mechanics of your vehicle are in excellent condition. Original paint and color that is not faded is also an exterior factor that should be taken under consideration. The vehicle's interior should be void of any smoke/water damage, stains, or other physical damage to interior materials. Keeping your vehicle in tip-top shape will equate to a vehicle's higher resale value."
